

A force multiplier for your senior strategists.

Not a competitor for their hours. NeverRanked measures AI citation behavior across categories. Your team executes on the punch list. Your client keeps the relationship with you.

If you read one thing first: the prior agency program (a wholesale reseller arrangement with $800/$700/$600 tiers tied to the Pulse/Signal/Amplify SKUs) has been retracted. The product those SKUs were built on did not work. The new model is described below. See /retraction/ for the full story.

The honest channel position

You sell the strategic relationship to your client. Your team writes the content, deploys the schema, edits the pages, updates the directory profiles. None of that is changing.

What we add is the measurement and diagnostic layer that no agency can credibly build in-house at engagement-realistic margins. Cross-engine citation tracking, source-type analysis, competitive cohort, recurring host pattern detection across categories. Output: a research memo plus a prepped punch list, written for your senior strategists to translate into client-facing recommendations.

The deliverable is built for your team's eyes. Technical specifics, priority order, effort estimates. Not a polished client-facing PDF. You repackage it in your voice, in your formatting, with your insights layered on top. Your client sees you as the expert. We are upstream.

What this is not

- Not a white-label dashboard. We do not produce a customer-facing UI for your client to log into under your brand. The deliverable is a research memo, not a product surface.
- Not a reseller program. No wholesale tier, no margin split. Same pricing as direct buyers: $4,500 kickoff per category + $1,500/month per category ongoing.
- Not a direct-to-client sales effort behind your back. If your client contacts us, we route them to you. We do not have the team or the desire to take execution work that belongs to you.
- Not a referral-fee arrangement. The economics work because of what you avoid building, not because of a fee structure.

Why the math works for an agency

An agency running NeverRanked on five active client categories pays $$4,500 \times 5 = $22,500$ in kickoffs (typically passed through to the clients, sometimes absorbed by the agency as a wedge into a larger retainer) plus $7,500/month recurring ($$1,500 \times 5$). The recurring is typically passed through to clients with a retainer markup, with the agency's senior-time savings staying as additional margin.

The senior-time savings are the actual mechanism. A senior strategist who would spend 4-8 hours a month interpreting AI search data, building a cross-engine view, and producing a recommendations document for one client now consumes a 10-page memo on Monday and spends the saved hours on the actual execution work that bills at agency rates. Across five clients, that is roughly 20-40 senior hours a month recovered.

WHAT THE AGENCY DOES TODAY

Senior strategist interprets AI search data, fragmented across whichever tools the client has access to

Implementer waits for the strategist's prioritized direction

Cross-engine view requires logging into Profound, Peec, plus manual engine checks

Competitive analysis is a quarterly project

WHAT CHANGES WITH NEVERRANKED

Senior reads a research memo on Monday, makes the strategic call, hands the punch list to the implementer

Implementer starts work on the punch list the same day, prioritized by impact

Cross-engine view is in the memo, every month, no logins

Competitive cohort is the default frame of every memo

Reporting to client is a quarterly deck the strategist writes

Reporting is the agency's repackaging of the monthly memo in the agency's voice

The handoff shape

1. Scoping call (30 minutes, your team plus ours). Pick the client category to run. Lock the competitor cohort. Confirm the query set.
2. Three-week kickoff. We measure daily across the seven AI surfaces. You go about your normal client work.
3. Research memo and punch list delivered to your team. PDF or markdown, whichever you prefer. Includes the executive summary you can drop into a client-facing recap with light editing.
4. Your team executes. Content gets written. Pages get edited. Profiles get claimed. We are not in the room for this part.
5. Monthly delta memo after the kickoff. What moved, what did not, updates to the punch list. Same format, your team consumes it the same way.

What we will sign in writing

- We do not contact your clients directly. All communication flows through your team.
- We do not solicit your clients for execution work. If they ask us for it, we route them back to you.
- Your aggregate data is not shared with other agencies or other clients. Cross-category patterns we observe stay anonymized and never reverse-engineerable.
- Standard NDA. Mutual. Reasonable.

What we will not sign

- Exclusivity in a market. The new product is too early for geographic or vertical exclusivity to make sense. Ask again in a year.

- Performance guarantees. We measure. We do not predict citation lift. See /methodology/ for what we do and do not claim.
- Uncapped indemnification. Standard cap at the engagement value, not negotiable for a small company.

What you would tell your client

We engaged a measurement partner to track how AI answer engines (ChatGPT, Perplexity, Google AI Overviews, the others) cite your category against your competitors. They produce the research. We read it monthly and translate it into the work you see us doing. The cross-engine, cross-competitor view is something no platform-internal dashboard can produce, and building it in-house would cost an agency the wrong economics. This is the right shape for what you are paying us for.

That paragraph is honest, specific, and lands with the kind of operator who appreciates the discipline. Use it or write your own. We have no preference about your voice.

Scoping a first engagement

Email lance@neverranked.com with two things:

1. The client and category you want to scope first. Be specific. "Hawaii consumer banking for First Hawaiian Bank" or "Honolulu boutique hotels for The Laylow" reads more clearly than "one of our retail clients."
2. Three to five competitors you want on the cohort.

A five-query pilot for that category runs at no cost, so your team sees the shape of the deliverable on your client's actual category before any commitment. The pilot is yours to keep regardless. The full kickoff lands three weeks after the query set is locked.
